A state of emergency has been declared in Florida ahead of Milton, which is forecasted to reach the western peninsula on Wednesday as a major hurricane.

Impacted Area:

Caribbean and Gulf Coast including Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, South Carolina

Overall Status Update:

Hurricane Milton is rapidly intensifying and will strengthen further over the record-warm Gulf of Mexico, potentially to Category 5. It is then expected to grow, which means that although it may decrease in category, its dangerous impacts will be spread over a much larger area. Milton is forecast to make landfall on Florida's Gulf Coast on Wednesday. Its dangerous eye and eyewall could come ashore anywhere from Cedar Key at the north to Naples at the south – including possibly in the Tampa or Ft. Myers areas.

Travel Impact:

Tampa International Airport will suspended all commercial and cargo operations as of 9 a.m. Tuesday ahead of Hurricane Milton.

The airlines have issued waivers for flight changes and cancellations.

CTM staff will rebook, cancel and refund all allowable flights and we are managing schedule changes. We are contacting all affected travelers.
